Positive Emotion	Engagement	Relationships	Meeting	Accomplishments
While studying in college I also started teaching as a part time job. After an year I had summed up decent amt of money and then I remembered my mother's bday is near so I gifted her a golden earring. She got so happy, that her eyes were filled with tears.	Recently I was supposed to design a website for a client, it was my very first fully owned project so I was too excited when ever I used to work, I used to work with so much dedication that I even use to forget to eat food.	I work for an NGO as an intern. The CEO of that NGO has done that he is so kind and humble person being such a renowned person he always treat me like one of his child, from him I learned your accomplishment doesn't matter all that matters is your behaviour.	Working in an NGO made my realise my importance and impact my work bring into the community. Earlier I was working for my benefit, but now my work is helping the needy person, so I feel myself special and my work valuable for that.	Because of my work I have become an important aspect of my organisations. Many decisions are taken with my involvement in it and taking my opinion. So I consider it as an accomplishment in my life.
